ABSTRACT

Defects are automatically detected in an image scanning device by performing a defect calibration scan of an image scanning area and detecting at least one defect in at least one section of the image scanning area. A tag is generated for the section of the image scanning area in which the defect is detected. The defect is compensated

5   for in the scanned image based on information contained within the tag.